Tashi Dorji (electric guitar) and Tyler Damon (drums/percussion) have developed a musical language that is not only shaped by original forms as free jazz, metal, rock and Buddhist monastic music. Their sound merges passion and emotions of literature, art, cultural movements, politics - flashes of ecstatic intensity, blurred timbral lines, fractal repetition, noir-ish, cinematic mystery and inclinations toward free play hint that the two are pleased to follow a winding path to destinations yet unknown.

Recorded by Dave Zuchowski, March 25th, 2018, as part of Elastic Arts' 2018, Chicago.
Mixed by John Dawson, Mastered by Martin Siewert
Artwork by Aaron Turner

In 2017 the duo released an album for Trost with danish saxophon player Mette Rasmussen.

"Together, the combination of Dorji's high-end metallic power-tool skree and Damon's manic-but-earthy hippie clomping are a perfect pairing. Each has a musical spoon in the other guy's soup to begin with, resulting in a collaboration that seems almost brotherly. [...] I'd say expect great things, but they're already happening." – The Free Jazz Collective
